THE BACHELOR OF DEVELOPMENT STUDIES (BDVS)

Objectives

The programme introduces the student to the formulation of social, political, economic, environmental policy and appropriate technology together with spatial connotation. It deals with policy formulation at national, regional and local level but considerable emphasis is given to the local development and its implications to national and regional implementation at the grassroots.

The program also aims at developing skills to enable its graduates to:

- increase production, particularly in natural resources level to achieve sustainable development
- restructure rural economies by identifying all causes and areas of current underdevelopment
- improve the development and management of rural areas
- develop linkages between lower and upper circuit activities particularly in relation to industrial development

- introduce students to the integrative, interdisciplinary and continuous planning process and evaluation
- promote techniques for effective political interaction and community participation as integral activities in the planning and technological development process
- identify short and long term policies for sustainable development
- critically analyse the human and non-human issues that affect development
